Talked of Former Days.

Mr. Davis loves to talk of his home, the Gulf coast of Mississippi and its advantages, his pictures, his books, questions in English literature, science, the arts, etc., in all of which he is perfectly at home and talks charmingly; his cadet life at West Point, and the men he knew there, who were afterwards famous; the Mexican Warrand life services, of which he speaks very modestly, but the brilliancy of which all the world knows; his services in the United States a fortnight later. Lincoln fell by the hand of the later. Lincoln fell by the hand of the assassin on the 14th of April, 1865, and assassin on the 14th of April, 1865, and is capture on the 16th of May of the same year.

The careful and dispassionate student who now looks back over the appalling events of our Civil War, with its intense passions perished, must accept the conviction that these two men, alled to supreme leadership in the most heroic struggle of the nineteenth whom he came in contact while serving in these high positions; his travels abroad, etc.
